Those in search of worthwhile flickering images about motorcycling could do a lot worse than pick up a copy of the new DVD, Choppertown: The Sinners from One World Studios (www.choppertown.net). First-time filmmakers Scott Di Lalla and Zack Coffman hocked what they could to buy a pro video setup, read the instruction manual, then documented a budget bike-build by the Sinners, a loosely knit brotherhood (don't call 'em a gang) of like-minded individuals heavy into traditional hot-rods and custom bikes, with a minor in beer-drinking and hard-drivin' tunes.

Tough, gritty and unscripted, Choppertown is the antithesis of the so-called "reality" chopper shows on TV—and eminently more entertaining. In fact, it just won the audience-choice award for Best Documentary at the Temecula Valley International Film Festival, a SoCal showcase for new independent films.

One of the original Sinners, Rico Fodrey, gave the movie a theme when he stated, "A bike's not finished until you put some miles on it with your bros."
